International Doctoral Research School in Labour Relations

The International Doctoral Research School in Labour was set up on 7 April 2006 on the basis of an agreement between the University of Modena and Reggio Emilia, Italy and the Ministry of Higher Education.

One of the key characteristics of the School is the integration with public bodies and private-sector firms, with an view to promoting the employment prospects of the doctoral research students in a range of activities reaching beyond the academic world.

Objectives

The aim of the programme is to select and train researchers in an interdisciplinary and comparative method, who are strongly oriented towards the practical application of results, with links to enterprises and social actors not just at national but also at international level. Starting from their research work during their doctoral programme, these researchers can expect to play an active role in Italian and international enterprises, international bodies, institutions, associations and trade unions (also by means of advanced apprenticeship programmes).

Curriculum

1st vear

- a) Courses, conferences and seminars
- b) Basic research, lecturing, internships

2nd vear

- a) Basic research/lecturing
- b) Dissertation/Research abroad
- c) Internships

3rd year

- a) Dissertation
- b) Internships

Teaching programme

The activities consist of classroom teaching, workshops, practical applications through company internships, basis research, and research on specific dissertation projects.

The first year consists of foundation courses in the following areas: Labour Law and Industrial Relations, Organisation and Human Resources Management, International and Labour Economics, Business and Financial Intermediation, and English for Academic Purposes.

The second year includes specialised seminars relating to the chosen research topic or area, as well as participation in the related summer schools, where appropriate. In addition, the research students have the option of spending a period abroad at universities with which agreements are in place.

The third year is dedicated almost entirely to the drafting and revision of the doctoral research dissertation.

In terms of teaching methods, an interdisciplinary and comparative approach is adopted, with an emphasis on the empirical and experimental dimension. Periods of study and theoretical research may be alternated with internships with institutions and/or research bodies in Italy or other countries, relating to practical applications in the working environment of the knowledge and skills acquired.

Research topics

- Labour Law and Industrial Relations
- Labour Organization and Human Resources Management
- Labour Economics
- Economics of Financial Intermediation.

Admission

For the 2012 intake the PhD programme consists of 12 places, of which six with a bursary. The selection procedure is based on the qualifications of the candidates, and details are published in August each year, with the deadline for applications at the end of October. In 2012 the annual pre-tax amount of the bursary was € 13,700.
